Arne Jacobsen

Danish Designer

The Danish designer Arne Jacobsen commenced his working career as an apprentice bricklayer ultimately moving into architecture, interior, furniture, textile and ceramics design.

He is best remembered for a series of chairs he designed which are now recognised as milestones in the development of modern furniture.

The Ant chair (1951) was his first acclaimed design. The Number Seven chair (1955) followed.

In 1956 Jacobsen created the organic sculptures known as the Egg and Swan chairs. He designed these "easy chairs" for the Royal Hotel in Copenhagen for which he was the architect.
