20th Century Modern Classics

Isamu Noguchi

American / Japanese Designer

One of the great sculptors of the 20th Century, Noguchi used sculptural forms to bring common use furniture to life.

Noguchi started his tertiary education studying medicine at Columbia University but abandoned these studies for painting and sculpture.

In 1927 he was awarded a Guggenheim fellowship which took him to Paris. He was an apprentice at the studios of Constantin Brancusi. It was during this period that Noguchi's work started to take on the elements of the art and architecture that had surrounded him during his childhood spent in Japan.
